STORY OF THE WEEK By: Zechariah Lipitz

A long time ago in a village in Poland there lived a rabbi who was very conscientious about the building of the sukka in honor of the holiday of Sukkot. The sukka that the rabbi had built for himself every year was a sight to see. The walls were of the thickest and best wood. Even the greenery that he used to cover the top of the sukka was thick and fresh.

Now it so happened that one year everyone in the village decided that they too could afford to build beautiful sukkas like their rabbi. The only hindrance was that most of them were not very good carpenters. Many of them were not even very handy.

What did they do? About 20 of the villagers, the ones who knew how to work with their hands, joined together to be the "sukka-builders" for the community and they set to work going from house to house building new sukkas for everyone.

Needless to say, they had to work day and night non-stop and made a lot of money that year building sukkas. A few hours before the holiday, as they finished the last sukka, they realized that they had been so busy working for everyone else that they had forgotten about themselves! They had no sukkas in their own courtyards.

What could they do? There wasn't enough time for each one to go home and build his own sukka, so they decided that they had no other choice than to take all the scraps and leftover wood and build one big sukka near the outskirts of the town for everyone.

They finished building their large rickety hut with just enough time left for everyone to run home and prepare for the holiday before sunset.

One and a half hours later, all the workers were sitting in the synagogue looking radiant, holy and very happy like everyone else, engrossed in loud enthusiastic prayer.

The prayers finished, they sang and danced together, shook hands and wished one another "Good Yom Tov (holiday)." Someone opened the huge doors for everyone to leave and suddenly... it began to rain.

For the first few minutes it looked like it wouldn't last long, but then it got stronger and stronger. The strong wind and rain even made it difficult to close the shul doors again, and the sound of the torrential rain and things smashing in the street made it seem like it would never stop. But after half an hour the rain ceased. The shul doors opened again, and the congregants began to joyously leave the synagogue into the muddy streets; finally they would be able to go home to their sukkas and eat the holiday meal! But they were in for a surprise.

All the sukkas had been destroyed in the storm!

In a few minutes everyone was standing again in the street in front of their homes not knowing what to do.

Then someone got an idea. "Let's go to the rabbi. He is a great man. Surely his sukka is still standing!"

Together everyone set out for the rabbi's home. But as they approached, they heard wailing coming from the rabbi's courtyard: "Oy, my sukka!"

The rabbi's sukka was even more destroyed than everyone else's; the walls had been completely shattered and one had even been lifted into a tree.

Then from far away they heard singing! It was coming from the direction of the worker's sukka. Immediately the children ran in the direction of the singing and in minutes they returned breathless with the good news, "The Worker's Sukka is standing!!"

"Nu," said the rabbi to the gathered crowd. "Go home and get your food. We are going to eat in a sukka after all!"

The entire night the congregation took turns crowding into the Worker's Sukka, two or three families at a time, ten minutes for each shift, eating their holiday meals.

So they did for the next three meals, one the next afternoon, that evening and the following day until they were able to rebuild their sukkas during the intermediate days of the holiday.

At the close of the holiday there were about 100 people in the rabbi's house with the same question "Why was everyone else's sukka destroyed except for the sukka of the workers?"

At first the rabbi tried to answer that maybe the winds were weaker on the outskirts of town. But that didn't work because trees were actually uprooted there.

Then he said that maybe it was because theirs was stronger one than everyone else's. But that also wasn't so because their sukka was built so hastily that the whole thing shook when anyone just pushed it.

So the rabbi thought for a minute and then a smile broke on his face. "I know!" He declared, "I know why their sukka remained standing! Because our sukkas were built each person for himself and his own family. But when they built their sukka it was with unity, each built for everyone else... And when there is unity between Jews, all the storms and the hurricanes in the world can't break it!"

PARSHA QUESTION By: Gavriel Grodka

What are three other names for Succos?

Stay tuned for the answer in the next Community Corner issue

Answer to last weeks parsha question:

Q. Who does Moshe call to act as witnesses in the beginning of the Parsha?

A. The heaven and the earth

MEGA VORT By: Yoel Megadesh

Succos

• Why do we only remember the special "clouds of glory" by eating in a succah, but we do not do anything to remember the manna and well of Miriam which were also miraculous?

1) food and water were necessary for our survival, but the clouds of glory were not necessary and therefore showed Hashem's special love for us, which is what we are celebrating.

2) the manna and water only came after we complained, and we do not want to remember that whereas the clouds of glory did not come about through complaining (Chidah)

• Why do we celebrate Succos right after Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur? After all, the clouds of glory began well before the first Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur in the desert? The gemara (taanis 24b) tells the story of how Rava prayed for rain in Tamuz when it shouldn't really rain and Hashem answered his prayers. However, his father came to him in a dream and told him not to stay in his house as something bad may happen to him since he caused Hashem to bring rain at an improper time. After leaving his house for the night, Rava returned and found that his bed had been stabbed with knives. Therefore, after Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur when we pray to Hashem and He may answer us beyond what we deserve, we leave our house in case there may be danger there. (Reb Shlomo Kluger)

INTERVIEW OF THE WEEK

A Few Words With...
DOVID GABAY

Get ready to plug in, because in this exclusive interview, we're kicking back with Dovid Gabay, one of the absolute biggest names in Jewish music today. If you've ever lost your voice singing along to hits like Hamsa or felt the insane hype from his live shows, you already know the crazy energy he brings to the mic. We caught up with the legendary vocalist to talk about everything from how he got his start and his favorite stage moments, to what it's really like making music that keeps everyone pumped up and connected.

How did you get into the Jewish music business originally and what inspired this great comeback?

I originally entered the Jewish music world simply because I loved Jewish music. Baruch Hashem, when Hashem gives you a talent, you have a responsibility to use it. After I got married, I felt that it was the right time to pursue music professionally. There was a magnetic pull drawing me in and thankfully, I listened to it! After stepping away from the industry for a number of years, I began feeling that pull again. My neshamah wanted to sing, create, and connect with people through music. The response to my comeback has been incredible. I've received heartwarming messages from people all over the world, some of whom apparently still remembered me after all these years! I'm genuinely grateful to be creating music again and performing at simchos and events.

What do you feel your mission is in the Jewish music space? What makes you stand out as an artist?

I believe that every singer has his place, his audience, and his own flavor to contribute. There's room for everyone because no two people have lived the same life or experienced things in exactly the same way.

At this stage of my life, I'm bringing more than just my voice to the music. I'm bringing years of experiences, lessons, struggles, and ideas that are uniquely mine. Recently, I brought some personal concepts to Yitzy Waldner, and together we turned them into beautiful songs. That's what I hope to offer: music that comes from a real place, reflects something meaningful, and connects with people.

Any exciting projects that you're currently working on?

After releasing "Hamsa" and "Melech," I'm excited to have just released a brand-new song on Motzei Yom Kippur in collaboration with my good friend Yechiel Schron. There are also several other projects currently in the works. I can't reveal everything just yet, apparently, musicians are supposed to create suspense and that's good for marketing :) but I'm confident you're going to love what's coming!

Is there any extra special moment throughout your career that you can share with us?

A band once called me to sing at a wedding. The customer was willing to pay my price, and the booking was basically finalized. At the end of the conversation, I casually asked, "By the way, where is the wedding taking place?" Based on the answer, I realized that it might not be the right type of wedding for me. I asked, "Will there be a mechitzah by the dancing?" There was a very long pause on the other end. The kind of pause that tells you that you already know the answer. Finally, they said no. I apologized and explained that I wouldn't be able to accept the job. They were shocked, but we ended the call. A few hours later, they called back and said, "Dovid, you're back on the job!" I replied, "I don't understand. I already told you that I can't do the wedding." They explained that the customer had been so impressed that someone would turn down income in order to stand up for the importance of a mechitzah that they reconsidered. They said, "That is what we want at our wedding." Because of that conversation, they decided to have a mechitzah. When I arrived at the wedding, I held onto the mechitzah for a moment and told the bandleader, "After 120 years, Im Yirtzeh Hashem, these mechitzahs are going to testify for me!" It remains one of the most meaningful moments of my career, not because of the performance, but because music gave me an opportunity to stand for something and, ultimately, to make a real difference.

What's your favorite Dovid Gabay song and why?

My favorite is "Havii" from my first album. The song speaks about the time when Mashiach will come and all the Jewish people from around the world will return home to Eretz Yisrael. What a beautiful thought! No matter where we live or how different our individual journeys may be, we are all part of one nation with one ultimate destination. That message has always stayed close to my heart.

What advice would you give for our young readers that like to sing?

Continue being yourselves. Keep singing, creating, and expressing who you are. There will always be voices telling you what you should sound like or who you should become but the world already has everyone else. It only has one you. Most importantly, remember that Hashem wants your heart, not a particular result. He wants your sincerity and your genuine desire to connect with Him. If your singing comes from that place, then whether you're performing for thousands of people or singing by yourself in your room, it has tremendous value. A G'mar Chasimah Tovah to everyone!

A Few Words With...
YITZY WALDNER

Get ready to go behind the scenes with Yitzy Waldner, the mastermind behind some of the absolute biggest bangers in Jewish music. Even if you don't realize it, you've definitely had his songs stuck in your head. He's written massive hits for legends like Mordechai Shapiro, Yaakov Shwekey, Benny Friedman and many others. We caught up with the talented composer to talk about his creative process, what goes on in the recording studio, and how he creates classic songs that continue to inspire listeners all over the world.

When did you compose your first song?

I was 12 years old in camp, and I was part of a play. My part was a boy in the Holocaust, and I remember, I was part of an orphanage in the play. So, as a kid yearning for his parents, I made up a song called Lamnatzeach, where some of the parts were a little bit stolen here or there, but for a 12-year-old, not a bad composition. And that was my first song that I ever wrote.

What's your process from composing to producing hit songs?

They are two different things. Composing is pure inspiration. In other words, you know, you could look at a pasuk, you could look at an idea, and you get a feeling, an emotion of how you want to present that concept. Usually the best inspiration is when you let it happen, not by forcing it. Sometimes you do have to work hard for it, sometimes it comes quicker. Some of my big songs like Mama, Maminim Be'Nissim, I Can Be, that I did with Shwekey, and some others, came very quickly. Some that I wrote in literally one minute. Some songs took me a long time. It all depends on Siyata D'Shmaya. In regards to producing hit songs like I said, that has to do with, you know, Siyata D'Shmaya like everything else. If Hashem gives you hatzlacha, you can do as many hits as you want. Is there a theory behind the hits? Yeah, I mean, you want to study your market, you want to make sure that you understand what's trending and what's doing well. And obviously not copy the worst thing to do is to copy, you want to innovate yourself to try to make your own hits but understanding what people are into.

How many songs have you worked on in your career?

So, I have Baruch Hashem, composed probably about 520. Around that number is what's been put out over the last 30 years between, you know, me composing for other people and myself etc. Many of the songs I've composed have not seen the light of day. Probably close to a thousand, but I'm not sure, it's hard to answer that because over the years many demos have been lost and many, just keep going, you know? And to quote my dear friend Yossi Green, when I told him that I was Baruch Hashem zoichah to put out over 500 songs, (he has over a thousand), he told me, "We're just getting started." And many many more in the works, B'ezrat Hashem.

Is there any special moment or story that you can share with our readers?

I once saw a comment that after a certain person listened to my song Eishes Chayil with Yaakov Shwekey. There was a girl who lived in Eretz Yisrael, and she wasn't frum. Her father had just started coming back to Yiddishkeit himself and his wife wasn't frum and his daughters were not frum and he was trying to get his wife to light candles on Erev Shabbos. And this girl says that her mother didn't want to, she wasn't up to it, she wasn't frum and she wasn't interested. One day while she was walking home from school, her friend showed her this song, Eishes Chayil. And she was overwhelmed with the song and she showed it to her father. And she told her father that Erev Shabbos, you know, you always ask Imma to light candles and she doesn't want to, maybe sing to her this song. And in fact, that's what happened. And she said her mother smiled tremendously when her father sang it. Fast-forward a year later, this girl herself is completely Shomer Shabbos and keeps kashrus and everything, and the mother always comes down and lights candles, you know, Ikavod Shabbos, and it's because of the Z'chus of this song. Many other singers as well can share many stories of things like this happening because of their songs.

Do you have a favorite song or project that you have worked on in the past?

There are so many. It's like asking who's my favorite child. However, I just released a song last week with Shulem Lemmer called Tefillas Chana. And to me, it's probably one of the nicest songs that I've ever written to this point, so go listen to it, it's a beauty.

Any exciting projects you're working on now?

Baruch Hashem yes, many. There's a lot of exciting projects that are being worked on. We're doing another Chasdei Lev project with a very special duet I can't release just yet. A great Shabbos duet with Yaakov Shwekey on his new Shabbos album coming out in the coming year, he has a few different releases, I'm not sure which one of the releases it'll be on, but it's a great, exciting project. A bunch of exciting singles in the works, B'ezrat Hashem.

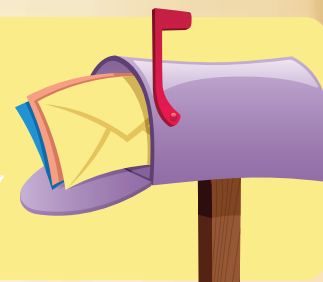

What message would you give our young readers?

If you truly believe you have a talent that Hashem gave you, don't ignore it, because Hashem gave it to you for a reason. Now, obviously, the most important thing for us in this world is to serve Hashem, and serving Hashem is through learning Torah, doing chesed, and davening and getting close to Him. But one of the ways of doing chesed is that Hashem gives us talents. Everyone has a different talent. Some people can speak well, some people can act well, some people can write well, some people can sing well, some people are just nice and they can smile or do chesed for people. In my world, it's music. So if you really feel you can sing, and people tell you you can sing, not just your Bubby, then sing! Sing for people, sing at the Shabbos table, sing in your shul, make people happy! And that'll give you satisfaction, and more importantly, it'll give Hashem satisfaction. And maybe one day you could earn money with it, who knows? And with that, you should have a Gmar Chasima Tova, and I wish everyone, all of Klal Yisrael, a tremendous year full of hatzlacha and hashpa'ah. You should be able to spread the word of Hashem and the word of Torah, and we should be able to see the Beis HaMikdash HaShlishi bikarov mamesh. Be gebenched!

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

By: Chanalee-The Challah Fairy

Zucchini and Veggie Kugel

Better than potato kugel and much healthier
 3 Tbsp olive oil (plus an additional Tbsp as needed)
 2 carrots, peeled shredded
 2 medium zucchini, trimmed and shredded
 2 yellow squash, trimmed and shredded

2 eggs
 1/3 cup creamy dressing or mayo.
 1 tsp kosher salt
 1/4 tsp ground black pepper, optional

1. Preheat oven to 400°F. Grease an 8-inch baking dish.
 2. Grate carrots in the bowl of a food processor. Heat oil in a skillet; add grated carrots. Cook for 3 minutes.
 3. While the carrots are sautéing, grate the zucchini. Transfer zucchini to a colander; squeeze out as much liquid as possible. Add squeezed-out zucchini to the skillet. Add an additional tablespoon oil if the mixture seems too dry. I always need more oil !! Don't be stingy !!
 4. Stir to combine; cook for an additional 3-5 minutes. Remove the pan from the heat; set aside to cool.
 5. In a large bowl, add eggs, mayo, salt, and pepper to cooled veggies. Mix well; transfer to prepared baking dish.
 6. Bake for 45-50 minutes, or until golden brown on top.
- Such a yummy kugel !!!

JONAH AND ZACK'S SUPER COOL FACTS!

By: Jonah & Zack Lenefsky

Your brain itself can't feel pain.
 The brain has no pain receptors, which is why surgeons can sometimes perform brain surgery while a patient is awake. Headaches hurt because of pain-sensitive structures around the brain, not the brain tissue itself.
Word of the week:
 Ubiquitous (yoo-BIK-wih-tus) — seeming to be everywhere at once; very widespread.
 Example: "Smartphones have become ubiquitous in modern life."

B'KITZUR

By: Daniel Moskovits

On Erev Succos, after Chatzos (Halachic midday), one should not eat a meal, so he will eat at night in the Sukkah with an appetite. It is forbidden to engrave in any food the Pasuk "Basukkos Teishvu Shivas Yamim" or any Pasuk as a Sukkah decoration because it will later become degraded when it will rot, and also because it is forbidden to write a Pasuk unnecessarily. Even after Succos, when one disassembles his Sukkah, he should not step on or degrade in any way the boards, Schach, or anything from the actual Sukkah (obviously not including decorations), for they are considered Tashmishet Mitzvah, items that were used for a Mitzva like Tzitzis strings.

3 COOL FACTS ABOUT IBEXES

1. They're incredible rock climbers.
 Ibex can scale extremely steep, nearly vertical cliffs, using their split hooves like gripping shoes.
2. Their horns can get HUGE. Male ibex can have curved, ridged horns over 3 feet (1 meter) long, which they use to battle other males.
3. They climb dams! Alpine ibex have been seen walking up the almost-vertical walls of dams to lick salt and minerals from the stone—sometimes hundreds of feet above the ground.
