STORY OF THE WEEK By: Zechariah Lipitz

Reb Avraham Mordechai of Pinczov, a chasid of the Chozeh, had three daughters to marry off but no means with which to do so.

"You are a chasid of the Chozeh [the Seer] of Lublin," his wife would tell him. "Why don't you ask him for help?"

Finally he relented and told his problems to the Chozeh, who replied, "Go to the town of Krasnik. The solution to your problems is waiting for you there."

The chasid took his clothes, books, talit, and tefilin and packed them all into a chest. He went to Krasnik and rented a room at an inn there. From the look of the chasid's chest, the innkeeper assumed that his new lodger was wealthy. The inn keeper treated him well, served him hot, cooked meals, and always made sure Reb Mordechai had everything he needed. As for the chasid, he spent his days studying Torah, waiting for the rebbe's bracha to come true.

Several weeks passed in this fashion. The innkeeper began to get suspicious. "You know," he remarked one day to his wife, "he hasn't paid me anything yet, and he hasn't done any business here since he came. I'm beginning to think he's not so rich after all.

Tomorrow, I will ask him to pay me. If he doesn't, I'll take whatever he has - though it doesn't amount to what he owes me - and I'll send him off.

That night Reb Mordechai had a visitor. It was the tutor of the innkeeper's children. He looked very nervous. "I have a confidential matter to discuss with you," the tutor said. "You must promise me you won't reveal it to anyone."

"I won't breathe a word about it to anybody," the chasid promised.

"Ten years ago my boss, the innkeeper, came back from a very profitable business trip. He had made 10,000 rubles. He put the money into a drawer and locked it up. I was up late that night and noticed that in my boss's excitement, he had left the key to the drawer on the desk. I was suddenly seized by a desire for the money. I opened the drawer and took out the money, hiding it in the backyard. The next day the innkeeper noticed the empty drawer.

"He became very agitated and began accusing this one and that, but it never occurred to him or his wife that it might be me, because they had always thought I was a very honest man.

"My conscience smote me when I saw how upset they were. I wanted to give them back the money, but I knew if I did, my reputation would be ruined. I was haunted by my deed day and night. Many times, I was at the point of returning the money, but I just couldn't bring myself to do it. Everyone would know what I had done, and I would be a ruined man.

"For ten years it's been eating at me, Reb Mordechai. I'm sorry I ever took the money. I have wished a thousand times that I hadn't taken it. I have never touched even a penny of it although there were times, believe me, that I could have used it.

"Please, can you help me out? Would you give them back the money for me? I can't eat or sleep until it is returned. And don't worry. They'll never suspect you because you weren't here when it happened ten years ago. And I trust you that you won't give away my secret." And the tutor handed the 10,000 rubles over to the chasid.

The following morning, Reb Mordechai spoke to the innkeeper. "I would like to tell you something private, but you must promise that you will ask me no questions."

"I promise," the innkeeper said.

"Did you ever have anything stolen from you in this house?"

"No, I don't remember anything like that ever happening. Wait. Yes, it did, but it was a long time ago - ten years ago," replied the innkeeper.

The chasid took out the bundle of money and put it in the hands of the astonished innkeeper. It was the long-lost bundle of 10,000 rubles.

"Wha-wha-what's this?" the innkeeper began to ask but recalled his promise and stopped. But perhaps he could ask something else. "Reb Mordechai, what are you doing here?"

"I'm not exactly sure myself. I'm only doing what my rebbe told me to do." And the chasid told the innkeeper his personal story.

The innkeeper realized that he was now in a position to help out the chasid. Besides, Reb Mordechai had just done him a tremendous favor. "How much do you need to marry off your daughters?" he asked.

The chasid added the figures in his head and told him. The innkeeper gladly gave the chasid as much as he needed.

When Reb Mordechai returned to Lublin, the Chozeh explained, "The melamed wanted so much to do teshuva that he wasn't letting me sleep at night. That's really why I sent you to Krasnik."

MEGA VORT By: Yoel Megadesh

Rosh Hashona. The Torah describes Rosh Hashona as being one day, however we celebrate it for two days, even in Eretz Yisroel. What is the reason for this?

The gemara (Rosh Hashona 8b) states that when judging a nation, the king is judged first and then the nation. The reason given is that if the nation were judged first, this would lead to anger because many people were probably evil, and we don't want the king to be judged in a state of anger after the nation. The Zohar states that if Rosh Hashona was only one day, the world would not last. A reason given is that Hashem judges the Jews during the day while they are doing mitzvos and less aveiros and He judges the gentiles at night when they are sleeping because then they are not doing as many aveiros. Therefore, if Rosh Hashona was only one day which starts at night for Jews, Hashem would be forced to judge the gentiles first at night which would make Him somewhat angry when He gets to judging the Jews during the following daytime. And that's why Rosh Hashona has to be two days. This allows Hashem to judge the Jews during the first daytime and then judge the gentiles the following night which starts the second day of Rosh Hashona!(Pardes Yosef)

B'KITZUR By: Daniel Moskovits

Short Halacha from
Kitzur Shulchan
Aruch Yomi -
Chapter 129 Se'if 1.

In every Kaddish that is said from Rosh Hashana until Yom Kippur, the word L'eiela is repeated, but since this part of Kaddish needs to have 28 words, we combine the words Min and Kol to be Mikol and then we have 28 words.
