Here are some bicycle safety tips for riding in your neighborhood:

1. Wear a helmet: It's crucial for protecting your head in case of a fall or collision.

2. Follow traffic rules: Obey stop signs, traffic lights, and lane markings.

3. Be visible: Wear bright or reflective clothing, especially at dawn, dusk, or night.

4. Use hand signals: Indicate turns and stops to alert drivers and pedestrians.

5. Stay alert: Watch for potholes, debris, and parked cars, and be mindful of pedestrians and pets.

6. Ride defensively: Anticipate the actions of drivers and pedestrians and be prepared to react.

By following these tips, you can reduce your risk of injury and enjoy a safe ride in your neighborhood!

STORY OF THE WEEK By: Zechariah Lipitz

Yaakov was a clever young man, who lived in a small village in White Russia. He studied Torah assiduously, and indeed, amassed a huge body of knowledge. In the same village lived several Lubavitcher Chasidim, who had long been trying to convince the talented lad to come with them to the Rebbe. But Yaakov, who was not raised in a Chasidic home, was not interested. "I don't need a Rebbe," he would answer them. "If I come across a problem in the Talmud, I just keep studying till I solve it myself." Nonetheless, one time his curiosity got the better of him, and he accompanied the Chasidim to the Rebbe, Rabbi Shalom Dovber (known as the Rebbe Rashab). They arrived in Lubavitch on Friday. That Shabbat, Yaakov found himself in an unprecedented state of spiritual elevation. After Shabbat, as they prepared to leave, Yaakov wrote a short note to give to the Rebbe, as was customary. He trembled as he waited his turn for a private audience. When Yaakov entered the Rebbe's room, he found the Rebbe sitting and studying a book. The Rebbe did not lift his eyes to look at him. Yaakov walked to the desk and placed his note on it. The Rebbe gave no sign that Yaakov was even in the room. Suddenly the Rebbe stood up and paced back and forth. As if talking to himself, he began to speak in Russian: "On! Nyet on!" ("It's him! It's not him!") On! Nyet on!..." The Rebbe paused for a long while then pronounced: "Nyet on!" He then sat down and resumed his study. Yaakov left the Rebbe's chamber confused and puzzled. Not only had the Rebbe ignored him, but his strange words kept reverberating in his head. Yaakov did not know what to make of it. One day Yaakov was reading the newspaper when he noticed a contest sponsored by the University of Petersburg. Whoever solved the mathematical problem printed in the paper would win 300 rubles. Yaakov saw the contest as a personal challenge. He studied the problem and sent off his answer by mail. A short time later a letter arrived from the University informing him that he had won. Enclosed with the letter was a personal invitation from the head of the mathematics department, and a train ticket. Yaakov traveled to Petersburg. The professors were initially surprised by Yaakov's traditional Jewish attire but quickly discovered his rare genius. After awarding him the monetary prize, they offered him a full scholarship to the University, which Yaakov accepted. In the beginning Yaakov maintained his Jewish way of life. But the more he progressed academically and socially at the University, the further away from Judaism he wandered. The external trappings were the first to go; eventually Yaakov completely abandoned Judaism. A few years later Yaakov was appointed as a full professor. Of course, beforehand, Yaakov had to renounce his Judaism and convert to Christianity. But he didn't blink an eye as he furthered his academic career. As time passed, however, Yaakov's conscience began to bother him. Although he deeply regretted his actions, he was unable to rectify the situation. In those days, a gentile who converted to Judaism or a Jew who accepted Christianity but later rescinded were subject to the death penalty. By that time Yaakov had become an accomplished hunter; the sport served to divert his attention from his frequent pangs of conscience. One day while out in the field, Yaakov's horse began to gallop uncontrollably. The reins were useless, and it was clear that barring a miracle, these were the last seconds of Yaakov's life. At that moment Yaakov resolved to repent and return to G-d. Incredibly, the horse stopped galloping and came to a halt. That night Yaakov packed a small bundle and left his house, leaving everything behind him for good. He wandered from city to city and from town to town, terrified of being discovered. His return to Judaism had endangered his very life, but his resolve to live as a Jew was unwavering. One day, while Yaakov was dining at an inn in a remote village, the police burst in and began to check the patrons' identity papers. Yaakov, who was not carrying any identification, was taken into custody. At the police station, the officer kept scrutinizing the photograph in his hand, then glancing up at Yaakov. From the corner of his eye Yaakov saw that it was a picture of himself as he used to look at the University: clean-shaven, nattily attired, and with a carefully styled lock of hair on his forehead. The investigator was clearly hesitant. Unable to decide he began to mutter under his breath. "On!" ("It is him!") A second later he changed his mind. "Nyet on!" ("It's not him!") "On!" "Nyet on!" Back and forth he went, studying the photograph and Yaakov in turn. "Nyet on!" he ultimately concluded and ordered that Yaakov be freed. Yaakov left the police station flabbergasted; he knew where he had last heard those very words. Immediately he set off for Lubavitch and remained there for the rest of his life.

PARSHA QUESTION By: The Rabbi

A. Lot, ancestor of Ammon and Moav.

MEGA VORT By: Yoel Megadesh

Parshas Vayeira. Perek 18. Pasuk 4.
This pasuk describes how Avrohom sent a messenger to bring water to the three angels who came to visit him. Rashi points out that because Avrohom used a messenger, Hashem also used a messenger (the well) to give water to the Jews in the desert. The question is, why was Hashem upset with Avrohom for using a messenger? After all, Avrohom was probably just teaching someone about the mitzvah of hosting guests, just like Rashi points out later on by Yishmael preparing the meat. The answer is that the best method to teach someone about doing mitzvos is to actually do them by yourself and not tell someone else to do them. Therefore, Avrohom really should have gotten the water himself and lead by example. (Reb Moshe Feinstein)

MITZVAH OF THE WEEK By: Shimon Elbaz

מִצְוַת לִרְעוּ כַּחֲמוֹךְ, love your friend as yourself
This mitzvah, says R' Akiva, is the most basic important mitzvah in the torah. It means treating your friend like you want to be treated. Even if it's not your best friend or even your enemy, you should treat them with kindness, respect and love. You never know, your enemy might become your best friend with just a little kindness. Sometimes, when it's hard to help a friend or be nice to a friend, try to remind yourself what you would want someone to do for you!
Example: when your friend is not feeling well, give him a call.
Another example: when someone does not have a friend to play with, you go over and play with him or invite him to play with you and your other friends.
Also, when your friend is sad you should go to him and you should ask him like what he wants to talk about and also and treat him like a real friend.
You should also treat your friends with love, kindness, and everything good.
If this is also your enemy, you should also respect him even if it's hard because enemies are hard to become friends with.
Another example is that whenever your friend comes for a playdate you should share your toys and not be like a mean person.ean person.
