Here are some bicycle safety tips for riding in your neighborhood:

1. Wear a helmet: It's crucial for protecting your head in case of a fall or collision.

2. Follow traffic rules: Obey stop signs, traffic lights, and lane markings.

3. Be visible: Wear bright or reflective clothing, especially at dawn, dusk, or night.

4. Use hand signals: Indicate turns and stops to alert drivers and pedestrians.

5. Stay alert: Watch for potholes, debris, and parked cars, and be mindful of pedestrians and pets.

6. Ride defensively: Anticipate the actions of drivers and pedestrians and be prepared to react.

By following these tips, you can reduce your risk of injury and enjoy a safe ride in your neighborhood!

STORY OF THE WEEK By: Zechariah Lipitz

Many years ago, after the rabbi of Tchentzikov had been married for eighteen years without having been blessed with children, he traveled to the Kozhnitzer Maggid to obtain the tzadik's blessing.

When the Kozhnitzer Maggid listened to the man's request he uttered a sigh from deep within his being. "The gates of heaven are closed to your petition!" he cried.

"No, no! Please, you must help me!" the man wept desperately.

"I cannot help you," said the Kozhnitzer. "But I will send you to someone else who will be able to help. You must go to a certain person who is called 'Shvartzte Volf - Black Wolf,' and he will be the one to help."

"Yes, I know him," the rabbi said, "He lives in my village, and a more coarse, miserable person you could never find."

At first the Kozhnitzer Maggid did not respond. The rabbi realized that if the Kozhnitzer Maggid was sending him to Shvartzte Volf, he must have a good reason. The Kozhnitzer Maggid then quietly revealed, "Shvartzte Volf is head of the 36 hidden saints whose merits sustain the world."

The rabbi sought out Shvartzte Volf in the forest hut which was his home. Though cognizant of Shvartzte Volf's true identity, the rabbi was still frightened to approach him. He devised a ruse by which to gain admittance to his hut. He would go into the forest just before Shabbat and when he found Shvartzte Volf's house, would pretend that he had lost his way. He would beg to spend the holy Shabbat there, and under the circumstances, Black Wolf could hardly refuse a fellow Jew that favor.

Friday afternoon he set out and as planned reached Shvartzte Volf's hut. He knocked on the door and the man's wife answered. Her horrible appearance marked her as a true equal to her husband, for never had a more hideous and unpleasant woman been seen. Nevertheless, the rabbi begged her to allow him to stay over Shabbat.

"Very well," she finally relented. "But if my husband finds you here, he'll tear you apart with his bare hands. You can't stay in here, but go into the stable if you want," she croaked.

Soon Shvartzte Volf arrived home and entered the stable, his eyes blazing with hatred. "How dare you come here! If you set foot outside of this stable, I'll rip you apart with my bare hands!"

The frightened Jew shivered in his boots as he beheld the terrible visage of Shvartzte Volf.

Suddenly the thought came to the rabbi that a tzadik is so pure that he acts as a mirror, reflecting the image of the person who is looking upon him.

Thus, what he saw in the appearance of Shvartzte Volf was nothing more or less than a picture of his own spiritual impurity. With that, he searched into his soul and prayed from the deepest part of his being. He poured out his soul and in those few moments returned wholeheartedly to his Maker. He felt himself suffused with a warm, peaceful feeling.

Suddenly he was shaken from his reverie by the unexpected sensation of a soft hand being laid on his shoulder. He looked up, not quite sure what he would see, a shiver of fear passing through him. There stood Shvartzte Volf, but instead of his accustomed fierce exterior, he had a refined and peaceful visage.

The visitor was ushered into the hut, which no longer appeared rough and tumble-down, but warm and inviting. Shvartzte Volf's wife entered with her children, and their appearance, too, was beautiful and serene.

Shvartzte Volf turned to his guest and said in a quiet voice, "I know why you have come here. I know, I know. You and your wife will rejoice in the birth of a boy. But you must name him Shvartzte Volf."

The rabbi wondered to himself, "How can I name my son after him? It is not our custom to name after the living," but he remained silent.

The following morning Shvartzte Volf passed away.

After Shabbat, the rabbi of Tchentzikov returned home. In time, he revealed to his congregation the hidden identity of the hated Shvartzte Volf.

True to his word, a baby boy was born and he was given the strange name "Shvartzte Volf."

In the year 1945 Jews who had survived the horrors of the Holocaust began streaming into the Land of Israel. When the Belzer Rebbe held his first Melave Malka in the Holy Land many Chasidim came and introduced themselves to the Rebbe.

This story was one of those related at that first Melave Malka of the Belzer Rebbe. And at that memorable occasion one man stood before the assembled and said, "My name is Shvartzte Volf ben Chana, and I am a descendant of that child who is spoken about in the story."

PARSHA QUESTION By: The Rabbi

Answer to last weeks parsha question:

Q. By which name does our parshah refer to Eliezer, Avraham's trusted aide?

A. Nothing, he is anonymous.

MEGA VORT By: Yoel Megadesh

Parshas Toldos. Perek 27. Pasuk 22.

ויאמר הקל קול יעקב והידיים ידי עשוי

In this famous pasuk Yitzchok states that "the voice is the voice of Yakov..."

The question is why the first word for voice is written without a vav and the second word for voice is written with a vav (הקל קול)?

The answer is that it is brought down in the pesichta eicha rabasi medrash that when the voice of Yakov is in the shuls and beis medrash, Eisov will have no power. In shul when we daven it should not be done out loud (sota 32a) but learning in beis medrash should be done out loud (yore deah 246:22). Therefore, the קל without the vav refers to when we daven in shul which should not be out loud whereas the קול with the vav refers to learning in the beis medrash out loud!(Rabbi Yedidya Tia Weil, son of the Karban Netanel)

Halachos about Tefillos within Shmona Esrai

In the winter we say Visein Tal Umatar by the bracha of Bareich Aleinu, which is a prayer for rain.

In Eretz Yisroel where rain is needed earlier, we start Tal Umatar by Maariv that begins the 7th of Cheshvan, and in all other countries, we start on the 60th day of the Jewish winter season, which comes out by Maariv of the 4th or 5th of December.

This is said until Pesach when we switch back to Visein Bracha.
