All types of oil are permitted to use for Chanuka candles, however, the best one to use is olive oil to remember the miracle that happened with olive oil during the times of Beis Hamikdash. Similarly, all wicks are permitted to use for Chanuka candles, however, the best one to use is wicks made of cotton which create a nice flame.

STORY OF THE WEEK

By: Zechariah Lipitz

Once there lived a wealthy Jewish forester named Yosef. Yosef was very kind and generous. He understood that G-d had blessed him with great wealth so that he could help others, and he was always ready to give to the poor. Not only did he give them money, he gave them jobs. He was happy that by giving employment to his fellow Jews, he could enable them to support their families. As Yosef's wealth increased, so did his charitable deeds. One day, a group of Jews from a nearby village came to see him. "We've come to ask you to help a needy bride and groom," said one of the group, Yonah the shoemaker. "They are both orphans, and there is no one to help them. They're getting married on Chanuka, and they haven't any money." "How much money do you need?" asked Yosef. "One thousand rubles should be enough," said Yonah. Yosef went to his desk and took out a packet of money. He counted out a thousand rubles, and handed it to Yonah with a smile. The villagers were stunned. They thought that Yosef would give part of the amount and expected to collect the rest from others. They could not thank Yosef enough. As they left, Yosef said, "Remember to invite me to the wedding. I want to participate in the great mitzva of rejoicing with the bride and groom." Some weeks later, Yosef travelled to Danzig where he had to collect payment from a number of his customers. He expected to be away for at least three weeks and told his family regretfully that he did not think he would be home in time to kindle the menorah with them on the first night of Chanuka. Yosef's stay in Danzig was blessed with success. Not only did he collect over 40,000 rubles, he signed on many new customers. He finished up his business more quickly than expected and was delighted that he would be able to surprise his family and arrive home in time to light the first Chanuka candle. Yosef purchased a ticket for the train ride home and entered a car that was not too crowded. He sat down, closed his eyes and dozed off. Suddenly, he heard voices whispering next to him. Opening his eyes, he saw two men sitting across from him, eying him suspiciously.

Yosef's heart skipped a beat as he thought, "They are planning to rob me!" Yosef quickly got up. He went from one car to the next, until he came to a car that was packed with people. He looked for an empty place and sat down. "Thank G-d, I managed to escape from those men just in time!" he said to himself. The car was crowded with farmers and peasants. Yosef felt much safer surrounded by people. The train sped on its journey. Gradually it grew dark outside and all the passengers fell asleep, except for the wary Yosef. Suddenly, he noticed the two strangers standing at the doorway of the car. Yosef opened his bag and took out the gun that he always carried. He made sure the men could see that he had it. The men quickly disappeared. Yosef realized his suspicions were right. For the remainder of the trip, Yosef stayed alert. He prayed to G-d to protect him, pledging to give charity even more generously when he returned home safely. When Yosef got off the train, he went over to a policeman, handed him several rubles, and asked him to escort him home. When he finally arrived home, Yosef breathed a sigh of relief. But no one was home. He realized that his family and servants were all still in the city as they had not expected him to arrive until later in the week. "What a shame," Yosef thought to himself as he began preparing the oil and wicks of the menorah for the first night of Chanuka, "after all my efforts to get here, I am still alone."

Yosef placed the 40,000 rubles in his safe. Then he retraced his steps back to the family's silver menorah, recited the blessings with much joy and watched the first light of Chanuka dance with delight. All was still in the house. Yosef sat by the candles for a while and then took out a book and began to study. The stillness was shattered by the sound of splintering wood. Yosef jumped up and saw his two "travel companions" from the train bursting through the front door. Brandishing guns, the thieves demanded that Yosef open up his safe and empty it out for them. They then tied him up with heavy rope and threw him on the ground. Yosef prayed to G-d, knowing that his life was in grave danger. Suddenly, sounds of voices and musical instruments could be heard from outside. The music kept getting closer and louder. The thieves turned pale, and began looking for a way to escape, but it was too late. From outside they heard happy shouts. "Reb Yosef. Open up. We've come to bring you to the wedding." The villagers marched through the open door. They saw Reb Yosef lying tied up on the floor and then they saw the thieves. They pounced on the villains and easily overpowered them.

Yonah the shoemaker untied Reb Yosef. "We came to bring you to the wedding, as you asked," he said. "And look at this!" "You saved my life!" Yosef exclaimed. "They would have killed me!" "Surely your mitzvot of endowing a bride, looking after orphans, and the desire to rejoice at a wedding saved you," said Yonah. The villagers escorted Reb Yosef to the wedding with much joy. As Yosef watched the happy dancing, he thanked G-d for all the miracles, the wonders and the salvation that had just occurred for him.

Parshas Miketz. Perek 42. Pasuk 24.

This pasuk describes how Yosef kept Shimon in prison when the Shevatim went back to Yakov to get Binyomin so Yosef could see him. The question is, why did Yosef have to keep Shimon in Mitzrayim? The Shevatim would have to return to Mitzrayim either way when they run out of food and would have to bring Binyomin with them in order to get the food from Yosef. The answer is that Yosef knew Yakov would be very hesitant to send Binyomin down to Mitzrayim because he was afraid something bad may happen to Binyomin. Yosef thought the Shevatim would therefore bring some random guy to Mitzrayim and tell Yosef that he was Binyomin and Yosef wouldn't know because he never saw Binyomin. But now that Yosef kept Shimon away from the brothers, Shimon would not know of this plan. Yosef could then simply bring whoever the Shevatim bring to Shimon in private and ask him if he knows that person. Shimon, not knowing the Shevatim's plan, will answer honestly that he doesn't know the person if it wasn't Binyomin. (Reb Shlomo Cohen - "Cheshek Shlomo")
