

Sometimes in early March 1975, Faisal bin Abdulaziz Al Saud, the King of Saudi Arabia received a female visitor who told him something that one would expect to disconcert anyone. The thing is, the woman who visited the king on that occasion is the wife of one of his half-brothers and what she told him is this: "my son Prince Faisal bin Musaid Al Saud is planning to kill you. I think he is angry that you have banned him from leaving Saudi Arabia due to the embarrassment he caused to the Kingdom [of Saudi Arabia] when he was arrested for drug-dealing in the United States where he was studying [at the University of California Berkeley]. He is also upset that the monthly allowance allocated to him is "just" $20,000". Please never let him into your presence as I believe that he is determined to kill you" - concluded the wife of King Faisal's half brother. King Faisal, responding fatalistically and perhaps ominously, said "If Allah wills it [that your son would kill me], then it will happen". It did happen. Specifically, at 3:30pm (Saudi Time) on Tuesday 25 March 1975, three weeks after King Faisal had the aforementioned meeting with the wife of his half-brother, King Faisal's nephew, Prince Faisal bin Musaid Al Saud assassinated him. Here is how the assassination happened: Prince Faisal arrived at the Royal Palace in Riyadh that day at about 3:00pm and he was ushered into a large hall where King Faisal was attending to a Kuwaiti delegation in a public gathering. Then, he (Prince Faisal) stood at the back of the dignitaries who were waiting to greet the King. As King Faisal approached the section of the hall where he was standing, he caught sight of him at the back and said "My dear nephew Faisal, come, come, come forward. When the 31-year-old prince approached his 68-year old uncle King Faisal, both men greeted each other with kisses on the cheeks and the forehead, the traditional Arab way of greeting. Then, the king tried to put his nose on the nose of Prince Faisal (another Arab form of greeting between close relatives), when the prince withdrew a pistol and shot him in the head, killing him instantly. PS: King Faisal is the third King of Saudi Arabia and third son of the founder of the country King Abdulaziz bin Abdul Rahman Al Saud. 2. Prince Faisal bin Musaid, who was a bachelor at the time, was getting a monthly allowance of about $20,000 in today's (2025) value from the Royal Purse. That $20,000 is approximately thirty million naira. Many Nigerians would say that a monthly allowance of N30,000,000 is substantial and should be enough for a bachelor with no children! 3. The royal guards grabbed and manhandled Prince Faisal when he shot the king. As they started to beat him, one elderly Saudi prince said "Stop, you can not lay hands on a prince. He is royal blood" 4. Prince Faisal may also have been angry with the King for his reformist and secularization policies. 5. He (Prince Faisal) was executed by beheading on 18 June 1975. 6. King Faisal was named 'Man of the Year' in 1974 by Time Magazine owing to his oil policies which impacted all countries of the world. The thing is, the King, angry at Israel after the 1973 Arab-Israeli War, implemented policies which led to the quadrupling of the price of crude oil in the international market. Nigeria made its highest foreign exchange earnings from crude oil sales in that period (the 1973 Oil Embargo).

Ingredients:

- Two pound carrots, peeled and cut into large chunks for fast cooking
- 3 Large Eggs
- 1/2 Cup oil
- 1/2 Cup Sugar
- 3 Tablespoons almond Flour
- 1 Teaspoon Baking Powder
- 1 Teaspoon Vanilla Extract

Topping:

- 3/4 Cup Cornflakes which can be replaced with almond flour or something similar
- 3 Tablespoons Brown Sugar
- 1/3 Cup Pecans
- 1 Tablespoon oil

Directions:

Cook carrots covered with water until soft, about 30 minutes, Drain water and mash carrots until smooth.

Preheat oven to 350

In a separate bowl.....mix eggs, oil, sugar, flour, baking powder, and vanilla to a bowl. Add in cooled carrots.

Place in a baking dish.

For the topping, combine the cornflakes with brown sugar, oil, and nuts in a food processor or plastic bag until well combined. Sprinkle generously over carrot soufflé, Bake 40 minutes. Serve warm or at room temperature. Enjoy!

WEEK 13

Dr. Hirsch's Answer:

Winter means closed windows and running heat, but it's also the season when carbon monoxide exposure becomes more common. Carbon monoxide, or CO, is an invisible, odorless gas that can be dangerous, even deadly, and young children are especially vulnerable. The good news is that carbon monoxide poisoning is largely preventable with a few simple steps.

What is carbon monoxide and why is it dangerous?

Carbon monoxide is produced when fuel does not burn completely. Common sources include furnaces, gas stoves, fireplaces, space heaters, and cars running in garages.

What makes CO so dangerous is that you can't see or smell it. It replaces oxygen in the blood, which means vital organs like the brain and heart don't get the oxygen they need. Infants, children, pregnant people, and those with heart or lung conditions can become sick more quickly.

Symptoms to watch for

Carbon monoxide poisoning can look like a viral illness, which is why it's sometimes missed. Early symptoms may include headache, dizziness, fatigue, nausea, or vomiting. More serious signs include confusion, trouble walking, chest pain, shortness of breath, or loss of consciousness.

In infants and young children, symptoms can be subtle, such as fussiness, poor feeding, or unusual sleepiness. If multiple family members develop similar symptoms at the same time, especially indoors, think carbon monoxide.

Prevention that saves lives

Install carbon monoxide detectors on every level of your home and near sleeping areas. Check batteries regularly. Have heating systems serviced yearly, keep vents clear of snow or debris, and never run cars, grills, or generators indoors or in garages. Carbon monoxide detectors are just as important as smoke alarms.

When to seek help

If your detector goes off, get everyone outside to fresh air immediately and call emergency services or the fire department. Do not re-enter the home until it's declared safe. If you suspect CO exposure based on symptoms, leave right away and seek emergency care.

Bottom line

Carbon monoxide is scary, but preparation makes a huge difference. Working detectors, routine maintenance, and quick action can keep your family safe all winter. If you're ever unsure, trust your instincts and seek help. Being cautious is the right choice.

Corgi

Built like tiny herding machines. Corgis were bred to herd cows and sheep. Their short legs helped them duck under kicks from cows while nipping at their heels!

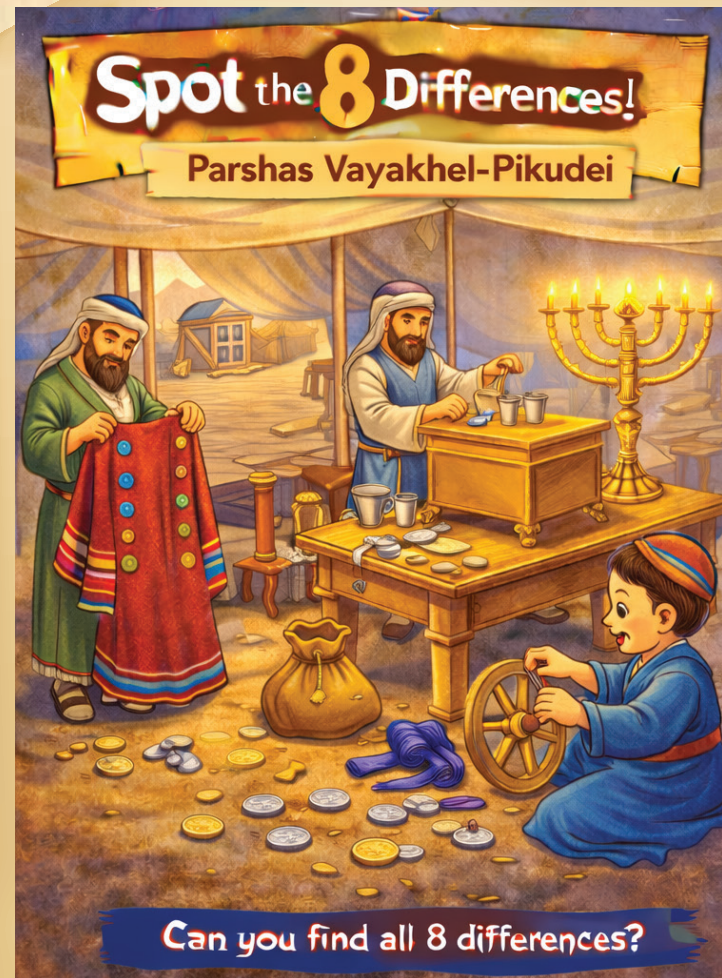

Royal dogs. Queen Elizabeth II loved corgis so much that she owned more than 30 of them during her life. They became famous as the royal palace dogs.

Vikings may have brought them to Britain

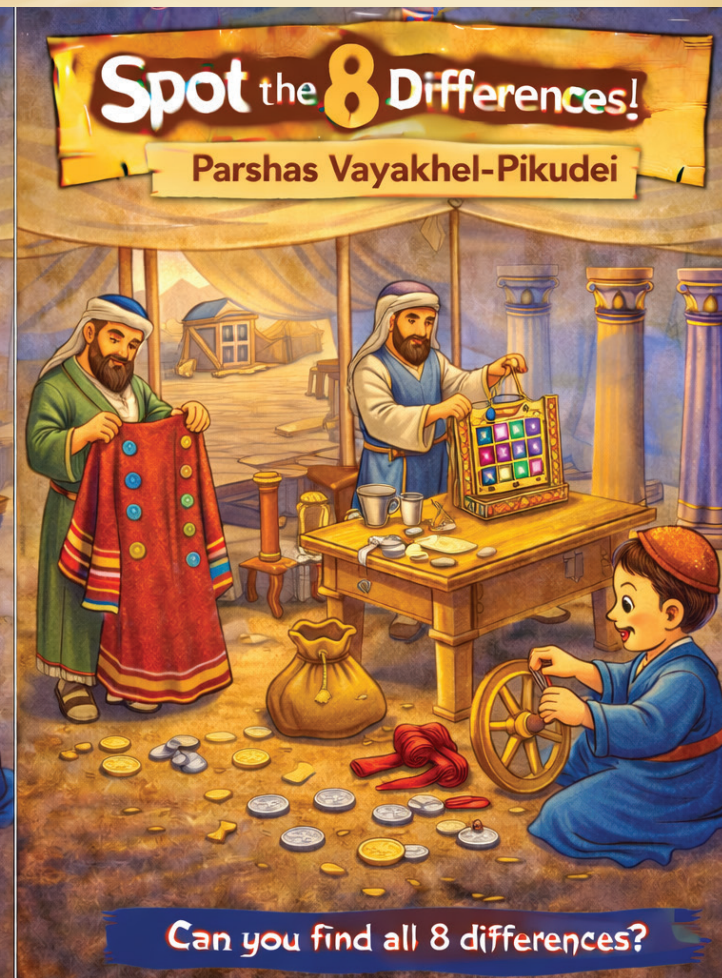

Some historians think corgis are related to Nordic dogs brought to Wales by Viking settlers over 1,000 years ago.

STORY OF THE WEEK By: Zechariah Lipitz

A man, a follower of the great tzadik (righteous person), the Shpoler Zeide, came to him weeping bitterly. "Rebbe," he cried, "what am I to do? Stolen property was found in my courtyard, and I am being accused of being a thief. My lawyer tells me that I will not escape with less than three months in prison." The Shpoler Zeide listened and replied, "I will be a better lawyer for you, and you will receive only one month in prison."

"But, Rebbe," the man continued, plaintively, "I am an innocent man. Why must I be punished for a month?"

"I will tell you a tale of a similar incident which occurred to me, and you will understand. Once I was staying at the home of a very hospitable Jewish customs officer. I became friendly with another guest there, and when the Shabbat ended, we made plans to continue our journey together. Unbeknownst to me, the other man had stolen some valuable pieces of silver from the house.

"As we proceeded down the road, we heard the sounds of a carriage approaching very fast. The man asked me to watch his pack for a moment, and he disappeared in the mass of trees. The carriage stopped in front of me, and I recognized the customs officer and a gentile officer.

"Seize him," the Jew cried. "He is the thief!"

"And before I knew what was happening, they threw me into the back of the carriage and we drove away. When I recovered from the initial shock, I tried to explain that it was not I, but the other man who had stolen the silver, but they scorned my words. It was obviously nothing would avail, and I accepted it as the will of Heaven.

"I was thrown into a cell full of frightening criminals who found my appearance an occasion for great mirth. They pulled at my sidelocks and beard, and I could only entreat the One Above to rescue me from their evil clutches. They tried to extort money from me, but when they saw I had none, they set out to beat me.

"The first one laid into me as two others held me down. As soon as his hand touched me, he cried out in pain. His hand swelled and gushed with blood. The thieves and murderers who surrounded me took conference with one another. One said I was a sorcerer, another claimed I was a saint; regardless of their opinion, they all agreed to leave me alone. "When the immediate danger had passed, I looked around at the other prisoners. One, called "Gypsy" turned out to be, instead, a Polish Jew who had been imprisoned for horse-stealing. I realized that I had been incarcerated precisely in order to help this pathetic man repent. Little by little we spoke and I gained his trust. He related a sad tale of being orphaned and then falling in with a band of Gypsies, whose ways he adopted.

"One morning the man came to me in a state of terror. He had dreamed of his dead parents who told him to do whatever I would instruct him. They said if he refused, he would die in his sleep. From that moment on he was the most willing penitent.

"Slowly, I instructed him in the Jewish religion. He stopped eating forbidden food, began to recite prayers, and begged the Al-mighty to forgive his errant ways. After several weeks passed, he even began sleeping near me and became completely attached to me in word and deed.

"A few days later I dreamed that Eliyahu told me to flee from that place and go to the town of Zlotopoli where I would be offered the position of beadle of the town. But then I remembered the "Gypsy," and my promise not to abandon him. But, I reasoned, if a miracle could come about for me, it could come about for him, too.

"I told the repentant man to follow me. When we came to the first door, we saw it was open. He held my belt and we passed through the door together, and continued into the black night, with no thought as to where we were going. Many hours later, we stopped at the house of a Jew who told us that we had found the path to Zlotopoli.

"Three days later, we arrived in the town, and I was appointed to the position of beadle. So you see, don't complain about the judgements of G-d, for they are very deep and beyond the understanding of men. Just be strong in your faith, for I can assure you that everything that happens, no matter how it appears, is only for the good. And, as I promised, you will sit in prison no more than one month."

MEGA VORT By: Yoel Megadesh

Parshas Vayakhel. Perek 35. Pasuk 20.

"And ALL of Bnei Yisroel went away from Moshe".

This pasuk is telling us that after Moshe made his appeal for donating to the Mishkan, ALL of Bnei Yisroel went away from him. What is this pasuk teaching us and didn't Bnei Yisroel always go away from Moshe after he spoke?

The answer is that after all of Moshe's other speeches many people stayed behind to talk to him in learning. But this speech was about donating to the Mishkan, so they ALL ran excitedly to get their donations for the Mishkan.

(Rebbi Eliezer Lopian).
