TORAH BOMB QUESTIONS By Rabbi Dr. Shaul Schwab

WEEK 14

Have a question for next week's column?
Send it to Lev Pediatric Care, and Dr. Hirsch may feature it in an upcoming Q and A.

1. The "mustache" is real — and it's made of spikes.
- During breeding season, male toads grow sharp, keratin spikes on their upper lip that look like a mustache. They use these spikes when fighting other males for territory and mates.
2. They build nurseries for their babies.
- Male Emei mustache toads dig small pits near mountain streams where females lay eggs. The male then guards the eggs until they hatch.
3. The mustache disappears later.
- After breeding season, those scary spikes fall off, and the toad goes back to looking like a normal toad.

STORY OF THE WEEK By: Zechariah Lipitz

The Rizhiner Rebbe had thousands of Chasidim in Ukraine while Czar Nicholas sat on his throne. It was during this period that the opponents of Chasidism made terrible accusations against Chasidim which reached even the highest gentile authorities. One time the Czar was told that the Rizhiner Rebbe considered himself a king, and that he did not recognize the authority of the Russian crown. Incensed, the Czar decided to dispatch an infiltrator to make an investigation. The infiltrator was a high-ranking officer, a renegade Jew happy to turn informer. Arriving in Rizhin, he asserted that he wanted to ask the tzadik (holy, righteous person) for his blessing for business endeavors. To ingratiate himself with the Chasidim, he bought refreshments. Then he began discussing his business, attacking the government for making laws and restrictions. The infiltrator was surprised that not one voice was raised in his favor. He repeated this performance several times, but each time was met by total silence from his listeners. One afternoon he was ushered into the Rebbe's room. The spy began to tell the Rebbe how, as a wealthy merchant, he was suffering from the terrible decrees and regulations imposed by the government. The Rebbe looked deeply at his visitor and said, "I will tell you a story. In a small village lived a Jewish innkeeper who had an only son named Yossel. Because the village was so isolated, Yossel had no Jewish friends. His best friend was Stepan, the son of the gentle handyman who worked for his father. Stepan had a quick mind and enjoyed sitting in on Yossel's Torah lessons. In fact, Stepan was quicker than Yossel to grasp the lessons. Years passed, and it was time to look for a bride for Yossel. A matchmaker came to the little village to interview him. Stepan sat together with Yossel as the matchmaker questioned him on Jewish topics. Each time a question was posed, however, Yossel was silent, while Stepan supplied the answer. It was clear to the matchmaker that this boy was not a good prospect and he left. The innkeeper decided to separate his son from Stepan. After much thought, he decided to send away both father and son. When the handyman heard, he protested: 'Why should I be punished on account of my son? Let him go out into the world.' And so Stepan left the inn. For many months Stepan went from one study hall to another masquerading as a Jewish orphan and receiving hospitality from Jews wherever he went. Eventually he tired of that life and decided to move to a large city, where he enrolled in a university and excelled in his studies. When he completed his courses, he began searching for a good opportunity. One day, arriving in a very distant city, he heard that the citizens were about to choose a new ruler, something they did every three years. All candidates were to present themselves at the palace where their suitability for kingship would be determined. Stepan rushed to the palace. With his outstanding intelligence, he was chosen king. Soon after his coronation the new king inexplicably began making terrible decrees against the local Jews. The most devastating was that the Jews would have to leave the realm at the end of twelve months! The Chief Rabbi declared a public fast, during which the people begged G-d to soften the king's heart. On the fourth day, he called a meeting of the seven most prominent members of the community at which he related to them his strange dream. He dreamed that in a faraway land there was a young innkeeper named Yossel who would be able to change the decree of the king. Strangely enough, each man present had had the exact same dream. Messengers were dispatched at once to bring the innkeeper to their city. They related their strange tale and begged him to accompany them and Yossel agreed. The prominent Jews of the city managed to arrange a meeting with the king, and Yossel was ushered into the royal throne room. Stepan was overjoyed to see his old friend, and they embraced each other warmly. "What is this I am told about the evil decrees you have made against the Jews of this realm?" asked Yossel. "I really don't have anything against the Jews," Stepan replied. "In fact, they have always treated me very kindly, but as soon as I became king, I felt that I had to make these new decrees. I don't entirely understand why." The Chief Rabbi explained: "Your majesty, our Torah teaches that the hearts of kings and rulers are in the hand of G-d. When Jews keep the Torah, they fare well. But when they rebel against G-d, He hardens the heart of their king, and they fall prey to evil decrees. Nonetheless, they do not pray for another king, for they know that it is their own actions that shape their destiny and not the will of the king." Having concluded his story, the Rizhiner looked into the eyes of the informer and said: Go and tell those who have sent you that the accusations against the Jews are untrue. They are loyal citizens and pray for the welfare of their rulers and the country in which they live.

MEGA VORT By: Yoel Megadesh

Parshas Vayikra. Perek 1. Pasuk 3.
This pasuk tells us that when we bring a korban olah it must be a male. We find by the korban chatas that it must be a female. Why is the olah a male and the chatas a female? To answer this question, we must first answer a different question. What is an olah brought for and what is a chatas brought for? An olah is brought for a sinful THOUGHT whereas a chatas is brought when a sinful ACTION was done, albeit accidentally. So, if someone had a sinful thought and was able to overpower it and not do the sin he brings a male olah because he acted strong like a male. But if he actually sinned (albeit accidentally) he brings a female chatas which is weak. (Kli Yakar)

RECIPE OF THE WEEK By: Chanalee-The Challah Fairy 917-414-9123

Pesach Friendly Spare Ribs
2lbs beef spare ribs, 1 Tbs paprika
2 tbsp coconut sugar (can use brown sugar)
1 Tbs onion powder, 1 Tbs garlic powder
2 tsp salt, 1/2 tsp black pepper
Mix spices together and rub into both sides of ribs. Place into a roasting or baking pan. Place a wet piece of parchment paper over surface. This keeps in moisture. Cover tightly with pan cover and bake at 300 for 2 hours. Meanwhile prepare sauce, in a bowl mix: 1 cup honey
1/2 cup coconut aminos - you can get this on Amazon kosher for Pesach
3 tbsp vinegar, 1 tbsp grated ginger, 6 cloves garlic minced
Once ribs have cooked for 2 hours, Discard fat that was released from ribs, and pour sauce over. Cover tightly and bake at 300 for an additional 1 hour or until soft.
